REFLECTIONS AND LOOKING AHEAD

In the last year, our speakers brought really interesting and diverse topics to campus, which encouraged intellectual and sometimes spirited conversations from classrooms to dorm rooms, off campus and beyond. From Jason Riley's somewhat controversial perspective on US race relations, to Samantha Power's call to young people to consider public service, to Anna Deavere Smith's poignant and breathtaking portrayal of the real-life characters in her play who are the subjects of social injustice.

We are incredibly excited about our lineup of speakers for next spring. The Chambers lecture will feature author Piper Kerman, whose bestselling memoir Orange is the New Black was adapted into a Netflix must-watch series. Kerman's talk will focus on the US criminal justice system. Anders Fogh Rasmussen, the former prime minister of Denmark and secretary general of NATO, will be the Clough Colloquium's featured speaker. Rasmussen will talk about America's foreign policy and its resulting risks and opportunities. We will co-sponsor the Lowell Humanities lecture, where former border patrol agent Francisco Cantu will talk about his professional experience, which he wrote about in his new memoir, The Line Becomes a River. The Brennan Symposium will feature Emily Chang, author of Brotopia, who will talk about how this generation of students can narrow the gender gap in the workplace.

The Winston Center will be forever indebted to our founding director, Dick Keeley, whose direction got the Center to where we are today— bringing the Boston College community together. I look forward to continuing Dick's work while forging new perspectives and direction to the Winston Center, which not only unifies the BC community, but embodies a culture of diversity and inclusiveness.

FAREWELL TO DICK KEELEY

In June, we bid farewell to the Center's founding director of programs, Dick Keeley. Keeley, whose guidance and vision helped shape the Winston Center's mission and our ensuing work, will be fondly remembered as the orator of ceremonies for his eloquent and warm remarks that welcomed audiences to all of our keynote lectures.

SIGNATURE EVENTS

SPRING 2018

Chambers Lecture Series
featured Jason Riley, Wall Street Journal contributor and a Manhattan Institute fellow, who talked about racial economic inequality during the Obama presidency. This talk was presented with the Thea Bowman AHANA and Intercultural Center's Black History Month Committee.

Clough Colloquium featured Samantha Power, former US ambassador to the United Nations, who talked about the importance of US leadership on the global stage. We partnered with the Women's Center in observance of Women's History Month.

The Center collaborated with the Lowell Humanities Series to bring to campus Anna Deavere Smith, actress, playwright, and professor, who performed excerpts from her recent play Notes from the Field: Doing Time in Education.

FALL 2018

Doris Kearns Goodwin with Chuck and Gloria Clough

The Jane Jacobs Lecture featured urban revitalization specialist Majora Carter, who talked about building sustainable urban communities, and why "gentrification" could be a good thing.

At the Clough Colloquium, Pulitzer Prize-winning presidential historian Doris Kearns Goodwin talked about the current American political climate, and her new book Leadership in Turbulent Times.

The Forum on Ethics featured Dan Price, CEO and founder of Gravity Payments, who made headlines when he raised the minimum salary of his employees to $70,000, inspiring companies around the world to follow suit. For Price, this is about doing what's right—where business ceases to be about financial engineering and greed but about values and serving others.

Winston Collaborations: The Center partnered with the student group Organization for Latin American Affairs (OLAA) to bring together experts (professors from Brown and Harvard) and observers (current and former BC students from Nicaragua) to talk about the economic and political unrest in Nicaragua. Other collaborations included former EPA Administrator Gina McCarthy, who talked about US environmental policy; former CIA spy Bill Plunkert '68, who talked about espionage during the Cold War; playwright Tena Stivicic, who talked about her play Invisible, a story about migration; and sisters Chanterelle (BC Law 'oo) and Vera (BC Law 'oo) Sung, daughters of Abacus Federal Bank's founder) who led a discussion after a screening of the film Abacus: Small Enough to Jail, the story about the only US bank prosecuted in relation to the 2008 financial crisis.

STUDENT PROGRAMS

Lunch with a Leader

The spring LWL session featured Richard A.

C. Coles '90, managing partner of the Vanbarton Group LLC, who talked about managing one's drive for success while maintaining a good work-life balance.

The fall LWL sessions featured alumni Jacqui Canney '89, executive vice president of the Global People Division for Walmart Inc; Janet Wang '99, managing director at Oaktree Capital Management; Keith

Janet Wang '99

This fall Brian Groves '93, director of global services at Facebook, was the inaugural Ethics & Lunch series speaker. He discussed how Facebook is dealing with ongoing privacy concerns and its position on free speech vs. hate speech.

The Brennan Symposium
featured Kristin Groos
Richmond '97, CEO and cofounder of Revolution Foods, who talked to the combined Jenks classes and the Winston Ambassadors about finding passion and courage in everything they do.

Winston Ambassadors led a get out the vote campaign at the fall student involvement activities fair. The campaign was inspired by spring Clough Colloquium speaker Samantha Power, who encouraged students to vote and be responsible for creating positive societal changes.
